

FIVE HOLE PROBE

Five hole probe is characterized by five pressure sensing holes lying in ten perpendicular planes with the line of intersection of the two planes passing through the center hole. This probe can be used to measure the local total and static pressure and the flow angularity in the two perpendicular planes namely, pitch and yaw planes. From these data the associated orthogonal velocity vector components are computed.

