

THERMAL MASS FLOWMETER

Thermal mass flow meters are designed to measure very low mass flow rates. The gas is passed through a capillary tube which is heated uniformly. When there is no flow through the tube the temperature distribution on both sides of the capillary tube with respect to the midpoint is symmetrical. When flow occurs through the tube the temperature distribution is asymmetrical and difference in temperature is proportional to the mass flow rate.

